large share of the social life of the summer season.

In Northern Virginia most of the beautiful old homes are quite close enough to allow a charming interchange of hospitalities, and society is very busy just now entertaining at small bridge parties that are given on wide verandas, or informal teas, served in quaint, old-fashioned gardens. Next month will usher in the big season at the Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs and other more or less prominent removes in the State. The Virginia Bar Association will in all probability meet at the liot, as usual, though there haven a great deal of talk about its meeting at the White Sulphur instead More than is usual, Virginians are throughing the coasts of the New England States this summer. Some of them are really "roughing it" in camps on obscure lakes and in pine woods, and others have taken cottages at fashionable resorts, where they will entertain accordingly.
